South Island of New Zealand Part 3

New Zealand • South Island • Part 3

South Island Part 3 is based at Manapouri, where a boat trip on Doubtful Sound was planned. On cold morning very early, the ferry started sailing out to Manapouri Power Station, where after a short time we were short in bus 105 down under the ground and sown the glory. We came up to the surface again and drove 30 km to the next ferry that took us out to the entrance of Doubtful Sound. On the way home, we heard a bay why it was called The Sound.

The next day on towards Invercargill.

From Invercargill it went along the coast to the north again with stops at The Catlins, Slope Point, The Petrified Forest, a waterfall and out to Nugget Point before stopping in Balchuta.

From Balchuta after overnight stay on towards Dunedeen.

A visit to the Royal Albatros Center was part of the trip.

In Dunedeen, some of the city was to be experienced. A brewery visit, a visit to the Chinese Garden before leaving Dunedeen.

The last two days with the camper started with a little north of Dunedeen at Moeraki Boulders. A stop in Oamaru before driving into the country. A longer stop at Takiroa to see historic site of Maori cave paintings. Along several embankments end in Zwizel.

The next days drive up to Mount Cook, then the next day towards Christchurch.
